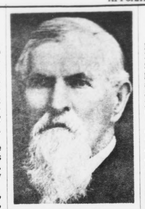
ACS Awards Four Cattle

Studies on treatment for advanced breast cancer and diagnostic tests for two types of kidney tumors are among the new research projects supported by the American Cancer Society at Virginia medical teaching institutions.

Four new research and clinical investigation grants totaling $232,435 have been awarded by the Society, - three to the Un. Virginia, Charlottesville, and one to the Medical College of Virginia, Health Sciences Division, Virginia Commonwealth University, Richmond.

The two-year grants are effective July 1 and bring to $636-322 the total number of research and clinical investigation grants in effect in Virginia at this time. There are currently 11 grants totaling $481,961 in effect at the Charlottesville institution and four grants totaling $154,361 at the Medical College of Virginia.



Richard Toler Moss
1844-1924

War Veteran

One reason for requests lately, in the TIMES-VIRGINIAN, for copies of N. R. Featherston's History of Appomattox, Virginia, is that photos of Civil War veterans appear there, such as the one above of R. N. Moses together with pictures of county officials, civic leaders and others, some of whom have passed away. Much credit is due Mr. Featherston for preserving a record of many county people. Featherston's history, now out-of-print, is highly prized by those fortunate enough to have a copy.

Richard Toler Moss entered the War Between the States in 1863. He joined Company B, 46th Va. Regiment, Johnson's Division, Wise's Brigade. He served the battles of John's Island, was wounded in front of Petersburg in June 1864. He returned to duty after convalescence, but was unfit for duty and was sent to a hospital. Later he was assigned to duty on the railroad. In his book Featherston recalls that he was "one of the leaders of his neighborhood and church and was for a long time clerk of Liberty Chapel Baptist Church".

FDA Rule Will Not Insure Unbreakable Eyeglasses

New York, N.Y. -- An unbreakable shield against eye injury will not be provided by the impact - resistant lenses required by the Food and Drug Administration in all eyeglasses made after Dec. 31, 1971, according to the Better Vision Institute.

The Institute, along with the FDA, is concerned that the public will think the new eyeglasses will be shatterproof or break-proof and that people may wear them in hazardous situations.

Although the new FDA requirement will afford the public greater protection than before, the new eyeglasses will not be unbreakable, the BVI said. Scratches will also reduce the impact resistance of the new lenses.

The new FDA regulation required that all eyeglasses and sunglasses have heat-treated glass lenses, plastic lenses, laminated glass lenses or glass lenses made impact-resistant by other means. All such lenses dispensed after Dec. 31, 1971, must be capable of withstanding an impact test in which a 5/8 inch steel ball is dropped on the lenses for a height of 50 inches.
